The performance of "A Modern Magdalen" as presented at the Grand Opera House, on Wednesday night, was one of the best all-round companies that has appeared here this season and was much enjoyed by those present. Each member of the cast was all that could be desired and the play was presented in an admirable manner. The audience, though not a large one, was a most appreciative one. There were five curtain calls.

The Herald Square Stock Company opened a three nights and matinee engagement at the Grand Opera House last night. The opening bill as presented last night, was "An American Beauty." Interesting specialties are given between the acts and the plays are presented in a clever manner. A family matinee will be given on Saturday afternoon.

To-night will be presented the great comedy-drama "The Police Alarm."

On Monday, T. D. Chenault & Sons delivered to J. W. Bales for S. & S., one hundred and sixty head of export cattle which averaged 1,556 pounds. This was the first lot of 450 head, which were sold some time ago at 6½ cents. They were shipped to New York over the L. & A. Richmond Climax.

AMUSEMENTS.

M. B. CURTIS.

—One of the foremost delineators of Jewish characters, M. B. Curtis, he of "Sam'l of Posen" fame is booked to appear at the Grand on Thanksgiving day, Nov. 27th, in a play entirely different from his former great success but which is, nevertheless reported to be both an artistic and financial triumph. It is called "Sam'l of Posen's Brother" and is the work of Herbert Hall Winslow.

Mr. Curtis' new vehicle is said to give the comedian more scope for the display of his ability as an impersonator of the German-Jew than any other role in which he has appeared.

Speaking of his new role in "Sam'l of Posen's Brother" Mr. Curtis said: "I am the first man who ever played the part of the German-Jew on the American stage. On returning to this country and noticing how the other impersonators of the Jew were caricaturing him, I determined to revive my former creation and begin where they leave off. I consider my new play far superior to "Sam'l of Posen" and my supporting company is the best I have ever had."

THE BEAR HUNTED

President Roosevelt Failed to Get a Shot at Bruin.

The Bear Killed Monday and a Deer Dispatched By Others Tuesday Will Be Taken to Washington on the Special Train.

Smedes, Miss., Nov. 19.—President Roosevelt's bear hunt in Mississippi is ended and he has not had even a shot at a bear. The last day of the chase was simply a repetition of the three preceding days so far as his luck was concerned. Try as the hunters would they could not get a bear within range of the president's rifle.

The dogs got a fresh trail early Tuesday morning and the president and Holt Collier followed it half a dozen miles to the Big Sunflower river. The bear crossed a mile below the ford they went to, and, believing he was making for the canebrakes on the other side they endeavored to head it off. When they got into the brake, however, they were disgusted to find that the bear had doubled on his track and crossed the river still further down. It was then 1 o'clock and as arrangements had been made to break camp at 2:30 the president reluctantly was compelled to abandon further pursuit of the elusive quarry.

While the president was out after bear, Maj. Helm, Dr. Lung and Secretary Cortelyou had a more successful deer drive on this side of the Great Sunflower river. They jumped up a buck and a doe. Maj. Helm killed the latter from his horse at about forty yards.

Although the president has failed to kill a bear on this expedition, he has enjoyed his outing and speaks in high praise of the hospitality that has been accorded him. He philosophically attributed his ill fortune to the traditional hunter's luck and says the next time he goes after bear he will arrange to stay long enough for the luck to change.

The breaking up of the camp Tuesday was an interesting proceeding. The deer killed Tuesday and the bear killed Monday were loaded, and will be taken to Washington on the special train.

When all was in readiness the president and the members of the party mounted their horses and rode into Smedes, leaving the wagons to follow. The president is a hard rider and the pace was rapid in spite of the bad trails.

Mr. Fish Tuesday night gave a dinner in his private car to the president and members of his party. At 9:30 the special train started for Memphis, having added the record of a presidential bear hunt to the fame of Smedes, which first became known to the outside world through the story that here the experiment of teaching monkeys to pick cotton was to be tried.

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 20.—At midnight the presidential party left for Washington over the Southern railroad. Col. L. S. Brown, general agent of the Southern, was in charge of the train. No stops will be made en route. The train will reach Washington at 8 o'clock Friday morning.

GEN. HERRERA.

The Revolutionists Will Surrender to the Colombian Authorities.

Panama, Colombia, Nov. 20.—The steam tug Bolivar returned Wednesday afternoon from Agua Dulce and from the signal displayed by the Wisconsin, Rr. Adm. Casey sent a launch to convey the government commissioners, Gens. Zalazar and Vasquez, and Gen. Cobas, chief of Gen. Perdomos' staff, on board the Bolivar. The conditions of surrender which will be offered to the revolutionists will be the same as those mentioned in President Marroquin's amnesty decree. Gen. Herrera can not expect to get much better terms than these from the government.

Revolutionary Gen. Nobles.

Colon, Colombia, Nov. 20.—Gen. Robles, the revolutionary chief, who recently surrendered in the department of Bolivar with 800 men and was said to have displayed a good spirit in favor of peace, has issued a circular in which he submits himself to the terms of the so-called treaty of Neerlandia, which was the convention under which the revolutionary general, Uribe Uribe, surrendered to Gen. Manjares. Robles orders the forces under his command to deliver up their arms to the government commissioners and urges his subordinates to carry out the terms of the treaty with loyalty.

Highest Average of Wins.

London, Nov. 20.—The American jockey Danny Maher, who sailed on the Celtic Wednesday for New York, has the record for the highest average of wins in the English turf season.

Soldiers Fatally Assaulted.

San Francisco, Nov. 19.—Corp. Edmund Perrin and Private David M. Milan were mysteriously assaulted at the Presidio Monday night. So serious were the injuries received by the men that Perrin died Tuesday and Milan is not expected to live.

The Marietta.

Washington, Nov. 19.—The Marietta left Laguira Monday for Curaçao. It is assumed that conditions at the former port are again normal, though it may be the Marietta has gone to Curacao to coal.

THE GHOULS' WORK.

Half of the Grave Robbery Business Has Not Been Told.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 19.—Mayor Bookwalter and Rufus Cantrell, the grave robber, had a conference in the grand jury room Tuesday. The mayor went to see Cantrell in answer to an appeal from a mother who feared that her son's body had been stolen. Before he left, Cantrell made a confident of him.

"If what Cantrell told me is true, half of this grave robbing business has not been disclosed," said the mayor when he returned to his office.

Minnie Weddell, of St. Louis, had appealed to the mayor to find out whether the body of her son Walter had been stolen from the Mt. Jackson cemetery. She could not afford the trip to Indianapolis.

Cantrell gave the mayor an exhibition of his unusually retentive memory. He immediately recalled the date of the lad's burial and the location of the grave.

"But we did not take that body," said he. "It was too small. I could only sell four bodies of children in a year, for the colleges only needed that many."

"Are you sure of this case?" the mayor asked.

"Sure. Well, I should say I am," answered the grave robber. "If you will go to Mt. Jackson you will find a lump of coal at the head of the grave. That is to notify any one in the business that the body is undesirable. The night after the boy was buried I went to Mt. Jackson to get another body. I took the coal along as a marker. It is a sign understood by all grave robbers."

When the mayor told Cantrell that Mrs. Weddell had said she had a lot in Garland Brook cemetery at Columbus, Ind., the ghoul broke into a laugh.

"The body never would have stayed there," he declared. "They get them all from Garland Brook."

Cantrell was before the grand jury for more than an hour Tuesday.

OHIO'S OFFICIAL VOTE.

For Secretary of State 811,467 Ballots Were Cast.

Columbus, O., Nov. 19.—The official count of the vote cast at the recent election in Ohio, completed Tuesday, shows a total of 830,131 ballots were thrown. The total vote cast for secretary of state was 811,467, as follows:

Laylin (Rep.)	436,171
Bigelow (Dem.)	345,706
White (Pro.)	12,336
Hayes (Soc.)	14,270
Adams (Soc.-Lab.)	2,983
Scattering	1
Total	811,467

Laylin's plurality, 90,465.

Kirtley (rep.) for member of board of public works has the highest plurality on the state ticket, 95,209, and Ankeny (rep.) for dairy and food commissioner the lowest, 86,135.

UNITED VERDE MINE.

A Fierce Fire Is Raging in Senator Clark's Holding in Arizona.

Butte, Mont., Nov. 19.—Advices received in this city Tuesday say that a fierce fire is still raging in Senator Clark's famous United Verde mine in Arizona. Carbonic acid is being forced into the depths in great volume but it has not yet had any appreciable effect upon the flames. With the mine openings closed it is thought this gas will finally quench the fire.

TOOK CARBOLIC ACID.

Bank Teller Committed Suicide in a Court Room.

St. Louis, Nov. 19.—William J. Lamayne, exchange teller at the Third national bank, committed suicide Tuesday in the court room of Justice Culinan.

The body was found Tuesday night lying on a table, with a half-drained cup of carbolic acid by its side. No motive can be assigned for the act.

Engineer Probably Fatally Hurt.

Devers, Tex., Nov. 19.—An east bound Southern Pacific passenger train was wrecked here Tuesday morning. The engineer, Joe Burts, of Houston was caught under the engine and probably fatally injured. Fireman Floyd, also of Houston, was badly scalded and otherwise injured, but is not believed that he will die.

Another Mine Resumes.

Shamokin, Pa., Nov. 19.—Two hundred men were re-employed by the Mineral Railroad and Mining Co. Tuesday, the lowest level of the company's Cameron shaft having been pumped free of water. The level had become flooded during the strike.

Their Salaries Raised.

New Orleans, Nov. 19.—The salary of the president of the American Federation of Labor was Tuesday afternoon increased from $2,100 per annum to $3,000, and the salary of the secretary from $1,800 to $2,500.

Elected President.

Havana, Nov. 19.—The house of representatives has elected Senor Portondo president of the chamber. Senor Garmendia, first vice president, Senor Cardenal, second vice president, and Senores Perez and Acosta secretaries of the chamber.

Died From Her Injuries.

Stevens Point, Wis., Nov. 19.—Mrs. Andrew Anderson died at Pine Grove Tuesday as the result of injuries said to have been received in a quarrel with her husband a month ago. Anderson was arrested in Waupaca last week

LIFE SAVING SERVICE.

Number of Stations at End of the Fiscal Year Was 272.

The Most Distressing Calamity of the Year Was the Drowning of Seven Members Off the Coast of Cape Cod.

Washington, Nov. 20.—The superintendent of the life saving service made public his annual report Wednesday. The number of stations embraced in the establishment at the end of the fiscal year was 272, of which 195 are located on the gulf and Atlantic coasts, 60 on the coasts of the great lakes, one at the falls of the Ohio river, Louisville, Ky., and 16 on the Pacific coast.

The life saving crews saved and assisted in saving 434 imperiled vessels, valued with their cargoes, at $3,567,220. Of this number 334, valued with their cargoes at $977,500, were saved without assistance. In the remaining instances the life saving crews cooperated with wrecking vessels, tugs and other agencies in saving property estimated at $2,494,665 out of a total of $2,589,720 imperiled. The crews also afforded assistance of greater or less importance to 661 other vessels, exclusive of 237 instances in which vessels running into danger were washed off by the station patrolmen.

Regarding the loss of seven members of the Monomoy crew the report says:

"The most distressing calamity of the year was the drowning of seven members, including the keeper of the crew of the Monomoy station, which occurred on March 17, 1902, off the coast of Cape Cod, only one man in the boat having escaped with his life.

The Monomoy crew responded to a signal of distress displayed on board the coal barge Wadens, stranded on Shovel shoal, and after safely taking into their boat the five men from the barge were engaged in the difficult operation of turning the boat and getting away when a sea broke over them, and the rescued men (who had been properly placed and directed to keep still) were seized with panic, instantly rising up, clinging to the necks of the surfmen, and so interfering with the surfmen that they lost control of the boat, which broached to and capsized.

A movement to raise by popular subscription a fund for the relief of the widows and children left dependent and needy resulted in the contribution of more than $45,000. Many of the maritime organizations gave further expression to the general sentiment of the country through petitions and memorials to congress urging the passage of a pension act to provide for similar cases in the future. A bill was introduced into the house of representatives and favorably reported upon by the committee on interstate and foreign commerce and the hope is earnestly expressed that it may become a law."

He was followed on the witness stand by Rev. Peter Roberts, Mahanoy City, a Congregational minister, who has studied the anthracite coal industry and has written a book on the subject. He was still on the stand when the commission adjourned for the day.

One of the most important things brought out during the cross-examination of President Mitchell Wednesday was his emphatic declaration that the miners were opposed to separating the bituminous miners from the anthracite workers, thus creating two organizations.

CHARGES AGAINST GOMPERS.

The Investigation Will Terminate in Complete Exoneration.

New Orleans, Nov. 20.—The special committee appointed to consider the charges made by President Shaffer, of the Amalgamated Association of Steel, Iron and Tin Workers, against President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, will report Thursday, probably in the afternoon. As an investigation it will terminate in the exoneration of President Gompers and as a sensation it will probably wind up in the wet fire cracker class.

Mr. Shaffer has not only failed to substantiate his charges, but a member of the committee is authority for the statement that he has never made any to that body at least. He has appeared before the committee and when he came away declared he had presented his charges. The committee says he did not formulate them. In the absence of direct accusation there can be but one end to the investigation.

Street Car Men Strike.

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 20.—Because the street car company discharged the secretary of their newly organized union all the employees went on strike Wednesday night and traffic was absolutely suspended on the city and suburban lines.

Adm. Schley in Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 20.—R.R. Adm. Winfield Scott Schley was the guest of honor Wednesday night at the annual banquet of the Commercial club, held in commemoration of the signing of the John Jay treaty. The affair was notable one.

The Blockade Ended.

Caracas, Nov. 20.—In consequence of the reoccupation of Coro by the government troops, the blockade at that port is declared to be at an end. President Castro's forces have reoccupied Carabobo and are now marching on Barquisimeto.

Day of Penitence and Prayer.

Berlin, Nov. 20.—Wednesday was the national day of penitence and prayer here. The Germans, who are liberal every other day in the year, Wednesday closed all their theaters and forbade any kind of public amusement.

Apple Growers' Congress.

St. Louis, Nov. 20.—The American apple growers' congress adjourned Wednesday night to meet here again next November. When the congress adjourned 127 members had been enrolled.

TAKING TESTIMONY.

Coal Strike Commission Setting as a Court at Scranton.

Scranton, Pa., Nov. 18.—In the presence of as many persons as could be jammed into the superior court room Monday, Wayne MacVeagh, for the Erie company, and John Mitchell, for the miners, continued their brilliant battle of cross examination before the anthracite coal commission. The two men, one in his thirties and the other in his seventies, were followed with intense interest by both the commissioners and the crowd throughout the day, and the contest will be resumed Tuesday morning.

The fourth demand of the union, which calls for a yearly trade agreement, and which means a straight out recognition of the union, was the bone of contention, and although four hours were taken up in a discussion of the question, not much material progress was made. Wayne MacVeagh, skilled in the art of cross examination, attempted to show the utter irresponsibility of the union and its unfitness to make contracts which it could not live up to. His principal argument was the alleged boycott, and he often pressed the miners' president for an answer. The latter, however, slowly and deliberately gave some reply, but he did not always satisfy the inquisitor. Mr. MacVeagh, in the presence of the assemblage, expressed his admiration of the ability of the witness, and on one occasion, when Mr. Mitchell parried a question regarding the boycotting of a coal and iron policeman by a hotel keeper, the distinguished attorney threw up his hands, laughed and said:

"Mr. Mitchell, you are the best witness for yourself that I ever confronted."

Mr. MacVeagh weighed heavily on what he said was a reign of terror in the anthracite region during the period of the strike. He read a list of 14 names of men who were killed during that time and also submitted in evidence about 75 printed pages of acts of alleged violence, boycott and intimidation and with the assistance of stacks of other documents, maintained that it would be utterly impracticable for the coal companies he represented to enter into agreements with an organization that could not control its own men.

Scranton, Pa., Nov. 20.—After being on the stand for four and a half days, President Mitchell, of the Miners' union, completed his testimony at noon Wednesday before the anthracite strike commission. During his ordeal he was examined by his own attorney and those of the Erie Co., the Delaware & Hudson, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, the Lehigh Valley, and the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Cos., and also by the attorneys of the independent operators.

He was followed on the witness stand by Rev. Peter Roberts, Mahanoy City, a Congregational minister, who has studied the anthracite coal industry and has written a book on the subject. He was still on the stand when the commission adjourned for the day.

One of the most important things brought out during the cross-examination of President Gompers and as a sensation it will probably wind up in the wet fire cracker class.

Trinidad, Col., Nov. 20.—The Colorado & Southern train robber who was shot by Express Messenger Shiber during the attempt to rob his car near here Tuesday night, was found near the scene of the attempted hold up Wednesday morning with a bullet hole through his stomach. He died a short time afterward. The man refused to give his name or those of his accomplices. Letters on his person, however, led to his identification as E. Hudson, a Gray Creek coal miner.

Alexander Clark, who is supposed to be one of the gang, was arrested as he was boarding a train near here Wednesday afternoon. He stoutly affirmed his innocence.

Posses are now scouring the country in search of Guy LaCroix and the other missing robbers. All the robbers were Gray Creek miners.

Action Against Anarchists.

London, Nov. 18.—Telegrams were published from nearly all the capitals of Europe Monday expressing indignation at the attempt on the life of King Leopold. The Standard says each fresh crime of this class revives the question of joint international action to

CHEESE IS HEALTHY.

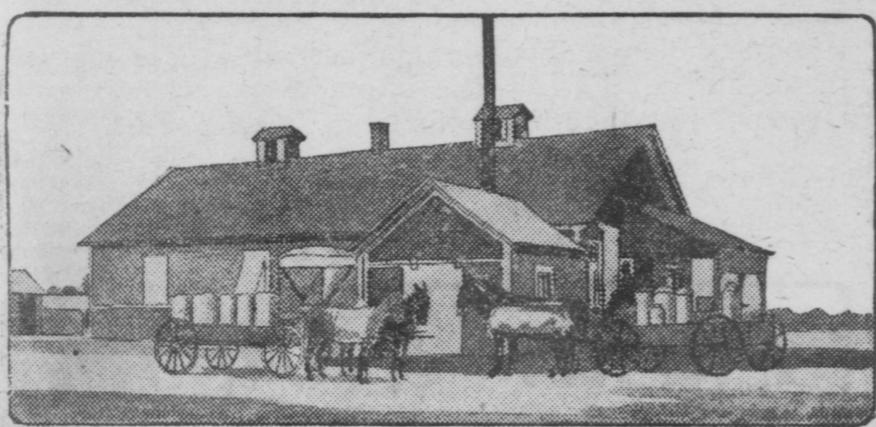

Contains Double the Nutriment of the Choicest Beef.

United States the Greatest Cheese-Making Country in the World—New York and Wisconsin at the Head.

[Special Milwaukee (Wis.) Letter.] NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that cheese is much more nutritious than meat, and less expensive, much less of it, per capita, is used in this country than in England, where the latter is not so plentiful. America is the greatest cheese-making country in the world, yet the average consumption for each person is three pounds, while in England it is 18 pounds. Our great cheese-manufacturing centers are in Wisconsin and New York, each of which has about 1,000 dairies. There are about 1,000 others generally distributed over the country. Wisconsin only manufactures about one-half as much cheese as New York. The production increased from 100,000,000 pounds (all made by farmers) in 1850 to 1,492,699,145 in 1890, 97 per cent. of which came from dairies. Of this latter, 37,000,000 pounds was sent to Great Britain.

From one gallon of milk a pound of cheese may be made, containing as much fat as three pounds of beef and as much protein as two pounds. The casein and butter fat contained in this food are very nutritious. It not only furnishes needed fat for the system but also produces heat and energy. Casein is a valuable protein composed of hydrogen, nitrogen, carbon and sulphur. If sugar and bread be eaten with cheese, the combination furnishes a most valuable meal, but the food will be found hard to digest unless one exercises vigorously. It is by some considered advisable to mix a very small quantity of bicarbonate of potash with cheese when it is eaten, as an alkali assists in rendering casein soluble.

In manufacturing cheese, fresh milk is first poured into a vat and left until the cream rises to the top. If "skim milk" cheese is to be made, the cream is removed. If whole milk cheese, it is left, and if cream cheese, more cream is added. The milk is now heated to a temperature of 90 degrees and left in the vat until it is sour enough to add rennet (an extract made from the fourth stomach of a sucking calf, an enzyme or bacterial product. As chymosin and pepsin, it is found in nature among both animals and plants). This causes the milk to coagulate in about 20 minutes, a quantity of whey containing a slimy white mass of curds. No scientist has yet been able to discover how the rennet produces this result. The rennet only affects the casein, while acids added change the milk-sugar. After drawing off the whey in order to dry the curds still more, they are cut by a wire framework into half-inch cubes, which begin to shrink immediately. They are now raised to a temperature of 100 degrees and raked around until about one-sixth their original size, when they gradually form themselves into a compact mass, which is now cut up into pieces several inches square. When these become fibrous and oily, they are placed in a mill and ground, then into cylinders lined with cheesecloth and pressed for about 20 hours until solid. The cheeses are then placed in a curing-house where they remain for several months, or until they acquire the desired ripeness and flavor. This process as described may seem very simple, but the dairymen do not find it so, for they have constantly to guard against hostile bacteria which may assail the material from the time it is poured into the vat as milk until it is a matured cheese. While trying to cope with these, he must exercise great care in order that friendly germs (without whose services he could have no good cheese) may remain uninjured.

(Discoverer of Bacillus 41, Which Has Revolutionized Cheese Making.)

In 1893, Prof. H. W. Conn secured a can of milk from Uruguay which contained a bacterium previously unknown to science, and which has proved to be of incalculable value to cheese manufacturers. This is a fighter, killing harmful bacteria while ripening butter, cheese and cream. It is the famous bacterium "B 41," of which pure cultures are now constantly being made and used all over the country. It is hard to imagine the advantage this discovery has proved to the cheese manufacturer. All sorts of experiments had been made to get rid of dangerous germs. Heating the milk was found unsatisfactory, as it was hard to raise the temperature of a large tankful evenly. Prof. Conn demonstrated that one cubic inch of milk may contain 500,000,000 bacteria. They are in the milk when it comes from the cow, they come from the atmosphere, the hands and clothing of the milkmen, the hay, the pens and buckets, everywhere. They multiply with great rapidity in the warm milk. Various species may change the milk to a variety of different colors; some render it bitter, some strong. They sometimes cause a cheese to swell, and when cut it is seen to be full of bubbles. Sometimes red or blue mold is found in great patches, rendering it unfit for food, occasioning a dead loss. If salicylic acid be added to kill these small enemies, the germs that are necessary to proper cheesemaking are destroyed also. Hence the value of the discovery of "B 41."

Wisconsin supplies nearly all our southern trade because, being fine in texture, its cheese stands the heat better than that made in New York, which supplies the export trade. A few years ago there was a large business done in "filled cheese," which is an adulteration, harmless and profitable had it not been represented as the genuine article, causing the government to legislate against it. The process of its manufacture consisted in using a "skim milk" cheese as a base and injecting into it with a steam jet some fat to take the place of butter. Oleomargarine was first used, then lard was found satisfactory.

The village of Cheddar, Somersetshire, England, gives its name to a cheese that has been noted for over 300 years. This is imitated all over the world, a very fine quality being made in Wisconsin. The English cheese of highest price and most imitated is the

PUTTING CLOTHES AWAY.

There Is an Art in It Which Once Acquired Aids in Making Smart Appearance.

The woman who knows how to put away her belongings is not only neat, but economical and generally smart in appearance, says the New York Times. When she comes in from a walk, she never hangs up her coat by the loop inside the collar, if she puts it away in the closet she uses a coat hanger—if she leaves it around the room knowing she may need it soon, she disposes it over the back of a chair that will keep it in shape. The skirts of her own gowns never have stringy look because they are always hooked and then hung up by two loops. For a tailor-made skirt she uses a small coat hanger with the ends bent down a little; this keeps the skirt in excellent shape and causes it to hang in even folds. The strings of her underskirts are tied and the garment is hung up by the loops, thus never showing a bump where it has rested on the hook. For the same reason her shirtwaists are always hung up by the armholes unless they have hanging loops. Handsome waists have both sleeves and body stuffed with tissue paper, and are then laid in drawers or boxes.

Shoes are easily kept in shape by slipping a pair of trees into them as soon as they are removed from the feet. If trees are not available, newspaper will do, if it is stuffed in tight. It is well to roll each veil on a stiff piece of paper; a single fold will often spoil the set of a veil and sometimes even mar the expression of the face. Gloves should always be removed by turning them wrong side out; they should be turned back again, blown into shape and each finger smoothed out. Ties, especially four-in-hand or garter ties, should be hung to avoid creasing.

Hats, of course, should be kept out of the dust and placed so that the trimming will not be disarranged. This disposition depends so much on the hat and the available space that each woman must use her own ingenuity. However, it is safe to say that no hat should be laid flat down on the shelf. Furs, also, should be protected from the dust, and a muff should always be stood on end.

NECKWEAR FOR WOMEN.

New Stocks and Bows That Are Exceedingly Effective in Finish—Tying Off the Costume.

The collar often makes the success of the gown. If it suggests the personality of the wearer, harmonizes with the whole effect, and has that correct dash of color which blends with the eyes and brings out the best tints of the complexion, then half the battle is won, says Woman's Home Companion.

This is a season of exceptionally pretty effects in neckwear, and the charming possibilities of a bit of lace at the throat are even more emphasized than ever.

The newest stock and bow give the girl who is skillful with her needle the chance to make for herself a bit of neckwear which will lend a distinctive, smart look to any gown with which it is worn. It is of lace hand-embroidered in colored silks. Any design may be used, but conventional patterns in bold relief give the best effect. A lace of a creamy tint should be used, but one not too heavy—an antique lace, point Venise or guipure would answer. Conventionalized fleur-de-lis worked in different shades of purple and green make an artistic design. Clusters of cherries and leaves, with the fruit embroidered in different tints of red, look especially smart on the ends of a creamy lace bow. If a smaller, less pronounced design is preferred, pink rosebuds scattered over the lace, or sprays of forget-me-nots, would be dainty and fetching.

English Pressed Pudding.

This is a favorite dessert among the Welsh and English. Take a basin, preferably a plain one, spread with cold butter and line closely with the crumb or soft part of bread, as if with a suet crust. Fill with any kind of boiled fruit, raspberries, currants, peaches, bilberries, etc. Sweeten to taste, and cover over the top with more bread. Then put a plate on it and press down with a heavy weight like a flatiron. Set where it will become thoroughly cold; turn out, and serve with whipped or plain cream. N. Y. Tribune.

Walnuts and Cheese.

To make the latter, beat to a cream one tablespoonful of butter, then add three tablespoonsfuls of cream cheese. Blend thoroughly, adding a little oil if necessary to make it creamy. Have ready a quarter pound of English walnuts, blanched and ground or chopped fine, and mix with the cheese paste; season with salt, paprika and a little lemon juice and spread on thin slices of brown or white bread.—N. Y. Herald.

Rice Surprise.

Line a buttered mold with boiled rice; fill with cold, cooked chicken and mushrooms fried in butter, adding enough chicken gravy to moisten, spread more rice on top and steam one hour; unmold and garnish with butter roses and parsley. Serve immediately to prevent roses from melting.—Good Literature.

Serving Boiled Pudding.

To turn out a boiled pudding which has been boiled in a cloth, dip it into cold water for a minute, place it in a basin which will just hold it, untie the strings and fold the cloth back so that when the basin is turned upside down on the dish the pudding will be free.—Washington Star.

Dr. Varden Files Answer to Divorce Suit.

Mrs. Emily Varden recently brought suit for divorce against her husband, the Rev. George Varden, of this city. Interest was keen to know what defense he would make to his wife's charges of cruelty and the general defense of his position. This is now known. His answer in the suit was filed at Lexington, Ky., Tuesday, his attorneys being McMillan & Talbott. The following is the substance of the answer.

By the first paragraph, he denies the jurisdiction of the court to determine this controversy.

The second paragraph denies that for more than six months, or for any time, prior to the 19th day of July, 1902, he habitually or at all behaved towards plaintiff in such a cruel or inhuman manner as to indicate a settled aversion to her, or so as to permanently destroy her peace and happiness. He denies that any cause of divorce exists and states that while the children are of tender age he does not object to her having the custody of them and that the oldest child is approaching school age, and he declares his intention of hereafter asking the court to give him the custody of both children as soon as they shall arrive at suitable age. He says that at the time of their marriage he owned a comfortable home in Paris, Ky., where he and the plaintiff commenced to reside and the plaintiff, after the said marriage, with defendant's approval, began to make visits to her parents in Lexington, and, later on, those visits became more frequent and quite protracted, against defendant's wishes, and the defendant had arrived at an age when he needed the comforts, the conveniences and the privacy of home; but his objections and protestations against plaintiff absenting herself for such long periods were in vain. This absence required defendant to give up his home temporarily and go to the plaintiff's home in Lexington or remain in his own house alone, missing the society of his wife, deprived of those kindly ministrations which are so grateful to advancing years, or forced as the only alternative to go out in all kinds of weather to a public eating house for his meals; while the plaintiff, with increasing apathy to defendant's welfare, left defendant's home in November, 1901, and remained with her parents until March, 1902, when the plaintiff and her mother came to defendant's home and remained for a period of two months, almost constantly in her mother's society, until finally, about the 15th of July, 1902, plaintiff, without the fault of the defendant, entirely abandoned his home and since that time has continued to reside with her parents in Lexington.

Defendant then goes on to state the number of his children by his former wife and the amount of property he received from her, which he says is the nucleus of his fortune. Defendant claims that since his marriage he has made nothing by writing or by prosecuting his avocation as a minister. He says he has always supported and is willing to support his infant children comfortably, suitable to their station in life, without being compelled to do so by order of court. His answers to the interrogatories annexed to the petition in relation to his property, and pray to be hence dismissed and for all proper relief.

The summary of his answers discloses that he owns in reality and personality about $24,000 worth of property, with an income of about $2,400 per annum.

"GREAT" fortunes are misfortunes," says Russell Sage. But it is noted that Mr. Sage is willing to suffer and be strong.

When you want a good shave, a hair cut or bath, call and see Carl, and he will treat you right.

Will Leave To-Morrow.

Col. Andrew Jackson Lovely will leave to-morrow for Pewee Valley, where he will enter the Confederate Home.

Col. Lovely is one of the oldest members of the lodge of Knights of Pythias in the world, being a charter member of old Peabody Lodge No. 18, of this city, which was organized soon after the war, and which was one of the first lodges to be instituted. Besides being an active member of the Paris lodge for a score of years, he has held every important office in the grand lodge of the state, having been Grand Outside and Inside Guard, Grand Master of Exchequer, Grand Keeper of Records and Seal, and Grand Chancellor, the latter office being the highest in the gift of the order in this grand domain.

He has also held the office of Colonel of the Second Kentucky Regiment, Uniform Rank, until a short time ago, when he resigned, owing to his infirmities.

At the meeting of the local lodge last night, a love feast was held, and many were the kind words expressed for the good health and welfare of Brother Lovely. He certainly will be missed by his Pythian brothers, who have ever looked upon him as the head of the order. He was probably the best posted Pythian in the state, having been a constant attendant upon all stated meetings of the lodge here at home, besides being a regular attendant at the grand lodge meetings, of which he was a member.

He entered the Confederate service as a private in Co. B., First Battalion, Kentucky Mounted Rifles, on Oct. 1st, 1861, at Prestonsburg, Ky. In 1862 the command was reorganized and his company was known as Co. D., Third Ky. Battalion Cavalry, Lt.-Col. E. F. Clay commanding. He was afterward appointed Commissary, with rank of First Lieutenant, and served until May 1, 1865, when he surrendered at Mt. Sterling, Ky.

Faithful to every trust, during the war, as he has been since, when he has held the office of Mayor, City Collector, &c., a comrade tells the NEWS that one day a comrade asked of him a handful of beans to use as chips in a game of draw poker. "Well," said Lovely, "I receipted to the government for these beans, to be issued out as rations, and not for gambling. My settlement with the Quartermaster will not show the issuance of any poker chips." That game was declared off and trays and fours were used as counters in a game of old sledge.

Small Pox At Lexington.

Small-pox at Lexington, it is said, is getting to be alarming. The papers of that city are withholding the real facts about the matter and persons can not be too careful in mixing. A lady from Lexington, who has been visiting in this city, has received a letter from there in which it says that if the dread disease gets much worse, that the schools will have to be closed.

DEATHS.

—News has been received in this city of the death of Mr. W. W. Ford, at his home, Lakeport, Ark., on the 5th inst.

Mr. Ford had lived South on his cotton plantation for many years, and his death will be sad news to a large circle of friends and relatives in Kentucky.

His wife was Miss Annie Milton, of Lexington, Ky., and she and two daughters survive—Mrs. Pattie Ford Fenton and Mrs. Katherine Ford Chamberlain.

Mr. Ford was born and bred in this city, and his mother, Mrs. Chas. Bent, Sr., still lives here. He has a brother, James Ford, now living in Louisville.

The meeting closed last night.

CHURCH CHIMES.

—A new Presbyterian church is to be built at Clay City to cost about $1,000. All but $200 has been subscribed.

Rev. Dr. H. M. Scudler, of Carlisle, who has been seriously ill, for two weeks, is able to sit up.

—The Thanksgiving sermon this year will be preached at the First Presbyterian church in this city, next Thursday morning, at 10:30 o'clock, by Rev. J. L. Clark.

—The meeting at the Second Presbyterian church has been well attended, both afternoon and at night, and the sermons delivered by Rev. Dr. Molloy have been listened to with a great deal of interest. On Tuesday afternoon, John Woodford was received into the church by confession of faith and was baptized.

The meeting closed last night.

THE JOYS OF WEALTH.

I crave the joys that wealth may bring,
I, too, would fain
Cease toiling and go journeying,
Care-free, across the main.
I long to go, some day, and gaze
Upon the scenes that Virgil knew,
And walk along the sacred ways
That Shakespeare sauntered through.

I crave the freedom wealth bestows,
I long for rest—
I long for all the pleasures those Whom Fortune favors best
May riot in from day to day;
I long to put my work away,
And flee, care-free,
From trouble as the wealthy may,
To splendid luxury.

But joys that riches bring shall ne'er
Be mine, if I must know
That for my pleasure there
Are others ground below!
Ah, do they never think who loll
At leisure as they please
Of those poor ones that work for all
The idler's luxuries?

CHAPTER XVII.—CONTINUED.

James Ellison laughed, but there was little heartiness in it.

"You still cling to that absurd idea. I thought the other day you were merely joking."

"I never joke on such a serious subject. Apart from the fortune, I find the young woman charming, and I am not too old to appreciate the charms, mental and physical, of so attractive a personage. I know you will find it hard to surrender the fortune, or the biggest part of it, to me, but you will have it in the family, and that should be a satisfaction," with a grin.

"Oh, a great satisfaction," replied James, grimly, as he looked at his brother keenly, to make sure that he was really in earnest. "And Grace, does she consider your attentions in any light but that of ridicule?"

"Oh, I have not been precipitate. I mean to win her by kindness.

"Since that—er—er—unfortunate tragedy she is in a sympathetic mood, and I can do much to comfort and console her." Frank Ellison reeled off this speech with apparent satisfaction, as if he was quite sure of his ground.

"And the school-teacher, what of him?"

"I don't think I need fear him any—he is as good as done for."

"You evidently are not aware of what has taken place," said James Ellison, with a pleasure that he could not disguise.

"What do you mean?"

"Why, the police have made an arrest. It is in this morning's paper." Frank Ellison allowed the cigarette to fall from his fingers, and the air of smiling complacency disappeared from his face.

"The police have found an earring, one of those my poor wife was robbed of on the night of the murder, in a pawnbroker's shop in this city. They have found the man who pawned it, and, though he denies that he had anything to do with the crime, they have still hopes of getting him to confess. Why, you seem very much disturbed over the news," as Frank flung himself out of the chair where he was seated, and walked back and forth with a nervous air, as if unable to keep still in one place.

"And what might this fellow call himself?" he asked, as he paused by his brother's chair.

"He rejoices in the name of 'Reddy,' as the police know him. What his real name is no one knows."

Frank Ellison looked relieved, and went back quietly to his seat.

"Well, perhaps they will find that the poor fellow's story is true. That need not interfere with my plans."

"But she will never forget Barnett. You don't know what a will that little woman possesses," said James. "To tell the truth, I would rather see her his wife than yours."

It was well that he did not notice the expression of anger that came over his brother's face as he said this, for it was not pleasant, but Frank could control his features, and the cloud was but a passing one.

"I thank you for your good opinion. Perhaps if I had been favored by fortune in capturing an heiress I might have lived as virtuous a life as you," with a sneering intonation in his voice.

"Now, that you are frank enough in saying that you prefer the school-teacher to me, I will give you a piece of interesting news."

James regarded the other with a certain uneasiness, wondering if it were well that he should anger him.

"I have made arrangements that cannot fail to get hold of that agreement."

"Ah!"

"When it is in my possession I shall be in a position to dictate terms. You will be interested in helping me in this marriage, because otherwise I should be tempted to make the paper public, and then every penny you have in the world will go to your wife's relatives."

James Ellison was silent, wishing that he had not provoked his brother.

But, after all, this might be mere bravado.

"When can you prove beyond doubt that the paper is in your possession?" he said, cautiously, "we may be able to come to an arrangement."

"Well, I expect in a few days to show you that I am not building a house of cards." And then, going over to his brother, he laid his hand on his arm. "In the meantime, Jimmy, I am sure that you will not resort to any double dealing that would prejudice my case."

For a second their eyes met, but it was James Ellison who first looked away.

"I will do nothing for a week," he said. "Then I will act as I wish."

"A week be it," replied Frank.

"And where is Grace now?"

"I think you will find her in the garden. Now, don't make yourself absurd. You know the poor child has had trouble enough of late."

"Don't fear that I shall do anything to make her unhappy. I can be very agreeable when I wish." And he went out and left his brother alone.

"If he really could get hold of the paper he might have the upper hand of me," said James Ellison to himself. "Unless," and he cast an anxious look in the direction of the safe, "unless the fortune could be placed out of his reach. Without that he would never care to marry. It is the money that he wants, and nothing more. Bah!" with an angry gesture.

"Rather than throw her into the arms of such a rascal, I—I—but pshaw! What am I talking about? She loves the other, and this cunning rogue could never win her in a century." And, comforted by this thought, he went to work again at his accounts.

Frank Ellison was smiling to himself as he made his way down the stairs, as if something amused him greatly.

"Birds in their little nests agree," he quoted, "but not birds of prey! How James would like to show me the door, if he was not afraid of what I might do. It is pleasant to think that I shall soon have a weapon in hand that will keep him, if rightly used, in subjection. It is mighty unfortunate that man should have been captured. It complicates matters and makes my work doubly hard."

He entered the garden, which, though small, contained some fine old trees, and under the shadow of these a young girl was seated. She had a book in her lap, but did not appear to be reading. A sombre and pathetic figure in her dull, black dress.

"Now, then, look pleasant," he said to himself as, at the sound of his steps on the gravel, she arose and came toward him.

"I can see that you have heard the good news," she said. "You show it in your face."

"I must have a very speaking face, then, my dear," as he took her hand and pressed it warmly. "What is the good news that you refer to?"

"Why, surely papa must have told you?" Then, as he did not seem to understand, "why they have found the real criminal, and now it will be impossible for them to hold poor Dick any longer."

"The deuce! She can think of nothing but that fellow," murmured Ellison, under his breath, but he took care that she should not see that the subject was unpleasant to him.

"Your father certainly did mention that suspect had been captured by the police, but it seems the fellow strenuously denies his guilt, and, for all we know, may be able to prove an alibi. So your friend, the school-teacher, is far from being a free man yet."

"Oh, dear, and I thought that the worst was over," her eyes growing dim.

"Well, we can only hope for the best," he said, soothingly, for he saw that to keep in her good graces it would not do to show any antagonism toward Barnett. "I am afraid, though, that in their eagerness the police have seized upon a poor man who has only his previous bad record against him. If young Barnett is innocent, he will get free. The law seldom makes a mistake. In the meantime I would not brood so much on the subject. You ought to get away from yourself and your thoughts more. Come, what do you say to a drive this afternoon. I'm sure it would do you good!"

"Oh, as if I could enjoy anything when I know that poor Dick is deprived of every comfort, it would only serve to remind me of his miserable position."

Frank bit his lip, for a good round oath was on his tongue.

"But, my dear," gently, "you owe it to your father—to me—not to give way in this manner. You are getting more pale and ghostly day by day, and will end by collapsing completely. You must make an effort—fight against living such a moody life, take some interest in things, or you will go mad through melancholy."

Jebb seemed at first startled by this sudden charge flung at him, but it was only a moment before he recovered his equanimity.

"So it was that worried you, eh?"

"Yes, it looked like too much double-dealing."

"Well, s'help me, I never see that party fore in my life, an' I was s'prised as you'd be when he tackled me on the corner. He knew me, though!" with a grimace.

"How did he know you?"

"Well, sir, he had it all down fine how I was mixed up in a little affair some time ago—somethin' that would surely have landed me if they could ha' got the proofs. He could ha' got enough—he showed me that in a

A face! The face of that strange little man who seemed to have taken such an interest in Dick's case. It seems that I saw the face peering in at us through the hedge."

Ellison waited to hear no more, but ran over to the gate set in the hedge, and dashed out of the grounds, staring up and down the road. There was no one in sight but a butcher boy pushing a handcart, and a man with a load of bricks passing. To satisfy himself, he went around the garden, examining every corner, and did not find his man. "It must have been your fancy, my dear," he said, when he returned to her side. "You see, you brood so much on this matter that you are getting to have hallucinations."

"Nuthin' more nor less than that I have found our man."

"Are you quite sure of that?" a little skeptically.

"No mistake about it," pursued Jebbs, cheerfully: "Ye see, it come about in this way. Ever since we had that last talk I been hangin' onto the heels of a fellow who has generally been one of his right-hand men. He's a big Dutchman, goes by the name of Browny on the Bowery, cause his hair is bright brown. Him and me has been great friends and emptied many a can together. I never could get him to talk of his work, or the man who employed him, but last night, when we was both feelin' kind o' proud, and him lookin' if he'd be more comfortable on the floor and a-ainz in that direction. Into this joint, where we was makin' merry, come a little feller that passed the place where we sat, and gin the Brown man a jog, and passed on and out the other door, and so away.

"I see my friend, sleepy like, put his hand down in his pocket, and fetch up a three-cornered bit o' paper, and opens it and reads. There was on'y a few marks and a number that I couldn't make out. When I was seen' him home, though, I snagged it, and here it is," and from an inner pocket he produced a two-inch square piece of paper, which bore the figure of a fox, or what was meant to pass for such, and the simple numbers 1—3.

"Pooh!" and Job threw it aside.

"I don't see anything in that."

Jebb replaced the paper in his pocket, as if greatly disappointed.

"You been so long away that it's natural ye don't see nuthin' in it. Now, I'll tell ye what I get out of it."

"Well, I am listening."

"Ye see this figure what's meant to represent a fox. That is the sign of a French hotel, what they calls in that lingo Le Renard Rouge, or, in plain English, the Red Fox. Them numbers means, the location of the meeting."

"But why should you suspect that it was this man who arranged the meeting?" asked Job.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE BLUE STONE RING.

Hendricks still occupied the little house at the end of the long garden, though he did not take as much comfort or feel so secure since the appearance of the coupe at the end of the street, and the mysterious meeting of Jebbs and the stranger.

After debating the subject over night, he could not make up his mind to move. If the worst happened, why he must try and find the way out of the difficulty as best he might.

He knew that the Ellisons had returned to town, and on several occasions he had attempted to get word to Grace, but the opportunity did not offer. He was delighted when he learned through the papers that a man had been arrested as a suspect in connection with the crime, and he felt sure that the young man would be acquitted. For the present he could let matters in that direction take their course. The work that he had cut out to do was quite as important, to revenge himself on the man who had been the direct cause of his years of misery. He had the hope of bringing that man to justice for many seasons, and now it seemed the victory was at hand.

As the days went by, and there were no signs of Jebbs, he became more and more uneasy. He began to think that this strange man was treacherous, and had, perhaps, gone over to the enemy. Certainly he did not appear to be a person who was above selling out.

His surprise was therefore great, when, returning one night, he saw a faint light shining through the shutters of the room on the upper floor where he generally slept.

Prepared for anything, he entered the house quietly and climbed the stairs to his room, threw open the door—and found—none other than Jebbs coolly seated at the table, discussing bread and cheese, stopping now and then to lift a can to his lips. He did not seem to be at all alarmed when the owner of the place entered, nor did he act like a man who fears that his knavery has been found out.

"How did you get in?" asked Hendricks, for he had since that eventful night taken great precautions about barring the doors and windows of the little house. It hurt him to think that this fellow was able to enter a place he had thought so secure.

"Well, I wanted to get in, and when I feel that way, nuthin' can stop me," said Jebbs, with his mouth full.

"I'd like to see the bolts and bars that could keep yours truly out when he general sleep."

Prepared for anything, he entered the house quietly and climbed the stairs to his room, threw open the door—and found—none other than Jebbs coolly seated at the table, discussing bread and cheese, stopping now and then to lift a can to his lips. He did not seem to be at all alarmed when the owner of the place entered, nor did he act like a man who fears that his knavery has been found out.

"Well, you needn't try it again," grumbled the other. "You may have an unpleasant surprise the next time, so I warn you."

"Why so crusty, old man. 'Spec' I was goin' to set down in the garden, git pneumonia waitin' for ye, when all I had to do was to let myself in. Not on your life." And he returned with fresh energy to his very frugal meal.

Hendricks, who had thrown himself wearily down in a chair, was regarding his visitor with such a malignant look that even the careless Jebbs grew uneasy, and stopped the mechanical movements of his jaws for a few minutes to say:

"Whatcher eying me so fierce like—and when I had good news to tell ye," adopting an injured tone.

"When you left me the other night you met a man who came in a coupe, you talked to him for a time on the corner, and then both went off in the carriage together."

Jebb seemed at first startled by this sudden charge flung at him, but it was only a moment before he recovered his equanimity.

"So it was that worried you, eh?"

"Yes, it looked like too much double-dealing."

"Well, s'help me, I never see that party fore in my life, an' I was s'prised as you'd be when he tackled me on the corner. He knew me, though!" with a grimace.

"How did he know you?"

"Well, sir, he had it all down fine how I was mixed up in a little affair some time ago—somethin' that would surely have landed me if they could ha' got the proofs. He could ha' got enough—he showed me that in a jiffy. When I found that out I was mighty meek."

"And you never saw him before?"

"Never I can call to mind."

Job remained in silence for some minutes, his eyes on the floor, only raising them now and then to cast a keen, inquisitive look at his visitor.

"Well, what is this great news that you have brought me?" he asked, after a time.

"Nuthin' more nor less than that I have found our man."

"Are you quite sure of that?" a little skeptically.

"No mistake about it," pursued Jebbs, cheerfully: "Ye see, it come about in this way. The Remarkable Experience of a Prominent Statesman--Congressman Meekison Gives Pe-ru-na a High Endorsement.

Congressman Meekison of Ohio.

Hon. David Meekison is well known not only in his own State, but throughout America. He was elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress by a very large majority, and is the acknowledged leader of his party in his section of the State. Only one flaw marred the otherwise complete success of this rising statesman. Catarrh with its insidious approach and tenacious grasp, was his only unconquered foe. For thirty years he waged unsuccessful warfare against this personal enemy. At last Peruna came to the rescue. He writes:

"I have used several bottles of Pe-ru-na and I feel greatly benefited thereby from my catarrh of the head. I feel encouraged to believe that if I use it a short time longer I will be fully able to eradicate the disease of thirty years' standing."—David Meekison, Member of Congress.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and we will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

The Story of the Ghost

By MAURICE VON HOLLENBECK.

BARON MAX VON VELDENZ, of the cavalry of the German imperial guard, despite his massive frame and his six feet three in his stockings, was much perturbed in mind. It was a fine morning in June, and he held in his hand a dainty note which had come to him by the first Berlin post. He had got away from the mess table to meditate in the privacy of his own rooms on the missive. The face which a short hour ago was radiant with health and cheerfulness was now drawn and haggard.

It was not long, this perturbing note, and ran as follows:

"My own darling Max—Your Eva is broken hearted. A bolt out of the blue has suddenly descended, blighting the tender flower of our happy hope. How I wept since the news of doom came over Goethe's 'Violet,' so cruelly crushed by the callous and heedless stranger! But, dearest Max, the Von Salitz family is poor; so, alas! ever dear one, are you. But still what happiness seemed in store for loving hearts until Gen. Helm von Grubsch came here! He is one of the Von Grubsches of Dusseldorf, and is immensely rich. He is of a grave, self-contained aspect, and with a heavy mustache, has a round trimmed beard. He is not altogether displeasing in appearance, but, my own Max, what of that? I do not love him; I love you, and you only. But papa came to me last night and says, 'Baron Helm von Grubsch has asked for your hand. He is wealthy and powerful. He will restore Salitz castle. You must marry him, Eva.' O, my Max, the nightingale sang last night, and I so sad. Come, O, my own one, see my father. Tell him of our love, and surely he will relent. Your loving, broken hearted,

"EVA VON SALITZ."

Max von Veldenz decided on the spot to obtain a week's leave, and congratulated himself on being first favorite with his colonel. The next day he was speeding as fast as an express train could take him towards the Eiffel mountains, where above the lovely slopes of an upland lake stood the castle of Salitz, a romance in stone embowered in a fairyland of forest.

Along the edge of the deep translucent lake there ran a sylvan path, with here and there a cunningly contrived rustic arbor—a happy spot known well from their childhood to Max and Eva. It stood midway between the rugged grandeur of Veldenz castle and the picturesque structure which was the home of the Revenant family. He, in despair, but disguising his grief, had come one night and played cards with his rival. Late, towards dawn, when the rosy fingers of the coming day were caressing the hill tops, the rich Revenant trumped the ace of hearts with diamonds. At that moment D'Estrées sprang from his seat and blew his brains out with a pistol. His rival died two days later, thrown from a horse. And since that date it was the tradition that if anyone who had separated two loving hearts should play at cards in the room, to him young D'Estrées would appear in the shape of the living lover and be a portent of the doom of the rich and ruthless destroyer of love's young dream.

She shrank from his embrace, as she would have done from a sacrifice. His heart sank within him; he knew he was too late.

"You are betrothed, Eva? You are to be his wife?"

"It is so, Max. My father besought me, weeping. It was so new, so strange to see him in tears. He implored, he commanded. We are poorer than I knew. He would have to sell the castle if I were self-willed, and wander forth a beggar. Ah, Max, it was terrible to hear him talk so, my father."

He scarcely knew what to say. He owed something to himself, he thought, but her distress stirred him deeply. He would make one more effort to rescue her from the clutches of Mammon. But here his reflection was brusquely interrupted by a resonant voice.

"Why, am I dreaming? Why, this is surely Max von Veldenz? Why, Max, I thought you were dazzling the Berliners with your horsemanship or exercising your squadron. Let me introduce you."

Eva had gone a shade paler. Max, when he turned, recognized the aristocratic face and figure of Count von Salitz. Beside him stood a military looking man, whom he guessed from Eva's description to be his rival.

"Permit me," said the count, "General the Baron Helm von Grubsch, Captain the Baron Max von Veldenz. We have been close neighbors all our lives, general, as I have told you."

"And now, Eva," continued the count, when the ceremony of introduction was over, "go on to the castle with the general, while I bring up the rear with Max."

"You have heard of Eva's betrothal, Max?" said the count as soon as the others were out of hearing. "She is to be congratulated, dear girl. The general is a fine fellow, and immensely rich."

The count leaned with a tender emphasis on the last two words.

"I have heard," said Max. "But is it too late, count?"

"What too late?" ejaculated the other.

"You must know," said Max, "that I have loved Eva ever since we were children. And, count, that affection of mine was returned. Is it not hard to separate our hearts, count? I am not rich, but I have enough, and who knows?—some of my mother's brothers are wealthy. Count, do you know how sad you have made life for me and Eva? Is there no way out? Surely it is not too late."

The count could scarcely command his voice to reply. At last he said, "It is too late, Max. There is no way out. The marriage will take place in two months' time, if nothing hinders."

"Then I will intrude no longer. Make my excuses to the general and Eva; I must go to Berlin."

A week later his friend and fellow officer, Goetz von Berlingen, burst in upon him before he was out of bed.

"Rise, sluggard!" he shouted. "Kriegs Mobil. We are to mobilize for war. In a fortnight the cavalry of the guard must be beyond the Rhine."

The Chateau Revenant in the neighborhood of Nancy had been forsaken by its aristocratic owners. When, in spite of their splendid bravery, MacMahon and his gallant troops had been driven in headlong rout from the blood stained field of Worth, the ancient family fled westwards, too, leaving behind only Gabriel Monod, the aged butler, to whom it would have meant death to go forth from the home of his masters, where he had lived, man and boy, till now 80 summers whitened his head. He would guard and care for it lovingly while they were away.

A patrol of Uhlans had ridden up to the main entrance, and the officer announced to the pale and astonished Gabriel that the must prepare breakfast for Gen. Helm von Grubsch and his staff, who would arrive and take up their quarters for the day, and possibly the ensuing night.

That was a day never to be forgotten by the aged servant of the Revenants. In and out of the parquetted rooms stamped the spurred and booted Germans, and instead of decorous stillness there was the clank of sabers, and the costly hangings of the stately dining and reception rooms showed through wreaths and spirals of tobacco smoke. And the wine cellar—the pride of the butler and the wonder of the neighborhood for miles around—what gaps were made in it! Was there ever such thirst known? At last the day came to an end, and the officers amused themselves with song and jest.

In a corner of the lofty drawing-room a card table was set out, and here Helm von Grubsch and three of his principal officers sat down to whist. Every now and then they would adjourn to a massive sideboard in the next apartment and quaff goblets of the Revenants, which was quite priceless. Gabriel came and looked at them from a nearer distance every now and then. Should he tell them the story of the Revenant ghost, and thrill the nerves of those haughty, martial Teutons? At last he plucked up courage, and asked permission from the "Messieurs les officiers Allemands." Helm von Grubsch laughed a consent, and to a mocking group Gabriel told his tale, and this is its substance.

A young man had been cheated of his lady love by a wealthy member of the Revenant family. He, in despair, but disguising his grief, had come one night and played cards with his rival. Late, towards dawn, when the rosy fingers of the coming day were caressing the hill tops, the rich Revenant trumped the ace of hearts with diamonds. At that moment D'Estrées sprang from his seat and blew his brains out with a pistol. His rival died two days later, thrown from a horse. And since that date it was the tradition that if anyone who had separated two loving hearts should play at cards in the room, to him young D'Estrées would appear in the shape of the living lover and be a portent of the doom of the rich and ruthless destroyer of love's young dream.

Lady Raglan is enjoying the distinction of evolving the most up-to-date charity show. She agreed to place herself on exhibition during the afternoon, wearing her coronation robes and coronet, for the benefit of the local hospital at Beckenham, Kent.

The modest sum of six cents was charged for admission to the hall where her ladyship was on view. The event was intended to be a quiet suburban affair, but the newspapers got hold of the story and the hospital authorities, to reap the greatest benefit, issued poster advertisements, announcing the appearance of the peeress in her robes and wearing the coronation medal presented to her by King Edward.

The Time to quit.

In view of King Edward's stubbornness it may be necessary for the gypsies to give up fortune telling, says the Chicago Record-Herald, and devote themselves exclusively to horse trading in the future.

INVENTOR HAS ODD SCHEME.

Ohioan Who Believes He Has Discovered More Effective Method of Firing a Cannon.

Army ordnance officers have been asked to give their attention to consider a remarkable invention of an Ohio man, who believes he has discovered something which will contribute to the deadliness of armament. The model which is submitted was a nickel-plated affair, sufficiently convincing in its operation in miniature. The inventor places six guns between upright wheels, suspending them after the manner of the carriages in the Ferris wheel.

By a simple mechanism different angles of fire, the same for all the guns at one time, may be obtained. It is proposed to rotate the guns, loading the guns in succession from a conveniently placed platform. The inventor believes that any caliber of gun may be placed in his wheel. He had left to the experts, however, the details of construction and such problems as the distribution of weight. By the most casual calculations it was found that the 12-inch guns which he proposes to be thus placed and his wheels would weigh 3,000,000 pounds. This does not take into consideration the axle and the other incidental mechanism.

BRITISH SOLDIERS IN WANT.

Problem Confronting England of Caring for Discharged Men Is a Serious One.

The problem of caring for the hordes of discharged soldiers in England now clamoring for employment is even more serious than the transport, remount and commissary scandals. There is no question that the various relief organizations accomplished a vast amount of good throughout the war and they are still doing so. They disbursed literally millions of pounds sterling in aid of widows, orphans and invalids, but now the workhouses of the United Kingdom are filled with time-expired men, and in all the big towns masses of volunteers and reservists are vainly seeking fresh situations in place of those their employers promised to hold open till after the war, but who did not do so. Strangely enough, while the cities are glutted with men out of work the farmers in all sections of the country are reported to be lamenting the dearth of field hands.

An Odd Nugget of Gold.

There have been many large and oddly shaped gold nuggets found in the United States and elsewhere, but the oddest of them all was that discovered at the Midas mine, on Sulky gully, near Melbourne, Australia, in 1887. The nugget was flat and almost the exact counterpart in contour of a colossal human hand held open, with the exception of the thumb and forefinger, which were joined together in a manner so as to make it appear that the thumb was holding the finger in place. Its greatest length was 12½ inches and its greatest breadth 8 inches.

It was of the very purest gold, with but a little of foreign substances adhering, mostly between the "fingers," and weighed 617 ounces. It was found in the northwest main drive of the Midas mine, 120 feet below the surface of the earth and at a spot only fifty feet from where the famous Lady Brassey nugget was discovered the year before. It weighed fifty-one pounds of pure gold.

Preliminary to the Baptism.

When Bishop Gee of Melbourne was a curate, a famous pugilist in the parish, who went by the name of Jim the Blogger and who had never darkened a church door, called at the parsonage asking him to baptize the baby. Accordingly the bishop repaired to Jim's house, but was surprised on being admitted to see Jim lock the door and pocket the key. "Be you the parson come to sprinkle that kid?" he asked. On the bishop assenting he continued, "You can't sprinkle that kid till you and me has had a fight, parson."

The unfortunate parson protested, but finding protest useless "stood up" to Jim. The battle went for the bishop, and Jim, pulling himself from the floor, muttered, "He's the parson for me." The baptism was proceeded with, and, as the story goes, Jim took to church going from that day.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Adequate Provocation.

An old Scotswoman had imbibed so much of the doctrine that music in church was sinful that when she came to this country she refused to subscribe to the general sentiment in favor of choir singing, etc. She scowled one day in her own church when the congregation took up an anthem that was scored rather elaborately and complained to her pew neighbor of the footfall the devil was getting even in the service of God, says the Philadelphia Times.

"But," protested her neighbor, "that anthem is very old and very sacred. Why, David sang it before Saul!"

"Weel, weel," commented the old woman, "I noo for the first time understand why Saul threw a javelin a' Daill when the lad sang for him!"

Settled the Wing Question.

Two little Philadelphia girls the other day strayed into the realms of theology and anthropology, though of course they didn't know it.

"Say," said the first, "wee Dod's it—'tis angels, isn't we?"

"Yeth," lisped the second, "but we hasn't don any feathers on uth, like the little angels my mamma showed me in a picture book."

"Well, we had once, don't oo know," returned the first, "but Dod pulled 'em all out before him sent us down here."

"What for did him do that?"

"So that we couldn't fly up in the trees when our mammas want us to come in and be washed!"

The Cannibal.

"And what?" asked the cannibal chieftain in his kindest tones—"what was your business before you were captured by my men?"

"I was a newspaper man," answered the captive.

An editor?"

"No; merely a subeditor."

"Cheer up, young man! Shortly after my chef has finished his perusal of the cookbook you will be editor in chief."

Laughing heartily at his bonmot, the cannibal chef wanted to know if the captive had a funny bone.—Judge.

Napoleon and His Mother.

Soon after Napoleon's assumption of the imperial throne he chanced to meet his mother in the gardens of St. Cloud. He was surrounded by courtiers and half playfully held out his hand for her to kiss. "Not so, my son," she gravely replied, at the same time presenting her hand in return; "it is your duty to kiss the hand of her who gave you life."—Chambers' Journal.

Theories.

"I suppose you have thoroughly investigated the conditions of which you are treating in your book," remarked the friend.

"No," replied the literary woman who had undertaken a great work. "You see, I'm afraid an investigation might interfere with some of the beautiful theories I have evolved."—Chicago Post.
